They are decrived of certain of their mental faculties while others remain in full force. They lose their sense of personal identity, and hence, to a certain extent their consciousness; or, rather, they pass into a state of consciousness different from that which is natural to them. So it is with a person as I have pre-lously mentioned, who has read like book and recoilects nothing of what he has read He was conscious of his realing at the time, but has forgotten his consciousness. Le is hence the subject of that remerkable condition known as de uple consciousness?"

Dr. Hammond here drew an outline of the ganglia of the br.i., showing that certain impre-sions received through the eye or the other senses might at the same time not be received by the centre of the brain, which was the real est of the will power and of the higher organiz.to n of the brain. During the hypnotised cord tion the individual's lower powers of the brain controlled him while the his her ones were evidently arrested or impaired Professor "ammond claimed that two males and four form ses out of every ten were subjects to the condition.
